TEACHER GUIDE for GOODS & SERVICES

GOODS AND SERVICES

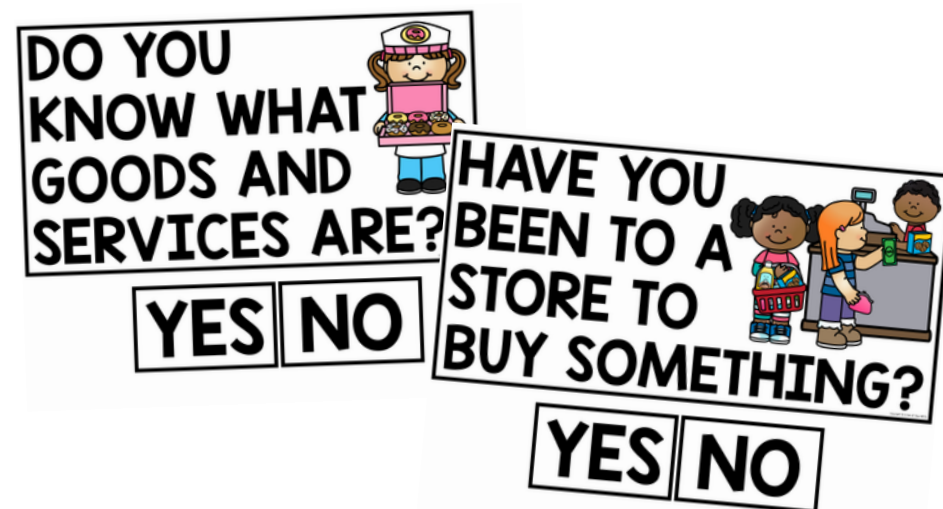

- Goods and services are part of the economy.
- The economy is the part of society that makes wealth. Wealth comes from the creation of goods and services that people then buy. The study of the economy is called economics, and the people who study economics are called economists. Economists look at how goods and services are produced, shared, and consumed.
- Goods are objects that are produced. They are physical products that can be touched. Other names for goods include products and commodities. Some examples of goods are food, houses, cars, clothing, electronics, toys, and any other item that can be bought or sold.
- Services are things that people do for other people in exchange for money. They can't be touched, as they are an action. Some examples of services include health care, entertainment, mechanical help, banking, etc.
- Some places of business offer both goods and services. For example, a restaurant offers goods (the food and drink you buy) and services (the waitress that serves you).
- People in the society are producers and consumers. Producers make, or produce, goods and provide services. Consumers buy the goods and services with money. Most people are both producers and consumers.
